

Norman Steinberg, a well known television producer and writer, as well as screenwriter, is visiting Morgan on Wednesday, March, 31. He is promoting the new M.F.A program in "Writing and Producing for Television" that he heads at Long Island University.

The commuter school has a unique location on a working studio lot where Martin Scorsese and Spike Lee among others work on projects including series, commercials, and features. The same lot serves as the back lot for the M.F.A. programs various concentrations.

As part of his cross-country tour to promote the program and meet potential students, he is visiting Howard, the University of Maryland, and Morgan while he is Maryland.

Norman produced the Cosby show for years, and was the co-writer with Mel Brooks of "Blazing Saddles" among other extensive credits.

His presentation will be from 11:00 to 1:00 PM in Morgan's Communications Center Lecture Hall, CC 101.
